THE GRAND TRUNK LINE DON OFFICES.

Every one is invited to make use of the facilities thus offered. The main office on the ground floor is a very handsome room furnished in leather, with tables of holly and ebony, and a fine suite of chairs, painted by Mr. Frank Hingray, R. A., representing the people of Canadian life, from the wild life of the Indian to the building of the railway, and the influence of the white man on the country.

Reception rooms are also provided for the use of visitors to transport bus-ness. On the second floor is another large reception room for visitors and friends to meet in. This room is supplied with Canadian newspapers and journals and a reference library, and Trans-Atlantic passengers visiting London, England, are cordially invited to visit these handsome new offices, their exact location being 17-19 Cockspur St., London, E. W. They are very easily found as the building is in the midst of the business district of London; in fact it is at the very hub of the world's transportation, and within five minutes walk of the leading hotels, and near the entrance to the tube at Trafalgar Street station.

The Grand Trunk, when its proposed extensions are completed, will be the most important transit system in the world, and it is fitting that they should have quarters in the metropolis of the world that will be in harmony with their wonderful growth. The Grand Trunk, when its proposed extensions are completed, will be the most important transit system in the world, and it is fitting that they should have quarters in the metropolis of the world that will be in harmony with their wonderful growth.

The new quarters are not merely an office building, but a meeting place for Canadian and American and their European, American and South African friends, a "Canadian commercial center" of international importance, known to supply the public with accurate and complete information concerning the business of Canada, and with the United States.

Will Promote Beauty.

Women desiring beauty get wonderful help from Buckle's Arctic Balm. It banishes pimples, skin eruptions, acne and blemishes. It makes the skin soft and velvety. It glazes the face, giving one eyes, nose, cheeks, lips, shaggy hands. Best for burns, scalds, frost bites, cuts, bruises and all skin troubles. Get it at Mrs. Fernald's, New Bedford Falls, 100 North Main St., or at Mrs. J. J. Reynolds' of Biddeford; C. A. Gar-dner of Portland, and Mrs. C. A. Gar-dner of Biddeford.

HEART THRILLING GEMS.

BRIGHTER SIDE.
If one looks upon the bright side,
It is sure to be the right side.
At least that's how I've found it as I've journeyed through each day.
And it's queer how shadows vanish,
And how easy 'tis to banish
From a bright side sort of nature every doleful thing away.
George Herbert.

"I Didn't Think."
If all the troubles in the world
Were traced back to their start,
We'd find not one in ten begun
From want of willing heart.
But there's a sly woo-working elf
Who lurks about youth's brink,
And sure dismay he brings away—
The elf "I didn't think."

He seems so sorry when he's caught,
His mien is all contrite,
He so regrets the woes he's wrought,
And wants to make things right.
But wishes do not heal a wound
Or weld a broken link,
The heart aches on the link is gone—
All through "I didn't think."

When brain is comrade to the heart
And heart from soul draws grace,
"I didn't think" will quick depart
For lack of resting place.
If from that great unselfish stream,
The Golden Rule, we drink,
We'll keep God's laws, and have no cause
To say, "I didn't think."
Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

GRAY.
"Absolutely black or white
Give me I pray."
Softly the answer comes:
"Life's" hints are gray:

"Sorrow with joy allied,
Good with the ill,
Child, in the twilight haze,
Learn, and be still."

THE OLD TRUNDLE-BED.
(James Whitcomb Riley.)
Oh, the trundle-bed where I slept when a boy,
What canopied king might not covet
the joy!

The glory and peace of that slumber of mine.
Like a long gracious rest is the basom
divine:
The quaint, homely couch, hidden close
from the light,
Not faintly drawn from its hiding place at night.

Oh, a nest of delight, from the foot to
the head,
Was the queer little, dear little, old trundle-bed!

Oh, the old trundle-bed where I wondered, saw
The stars through the window and listened with awe
To the sigh of the winds as they trembling crept
Through the trees where the robins so restlessly slept

Where I heard the low, murmurous chirping of the wren
And the Katydids listlessly chirrup
again,
Till my fancies grew faint and were drowsily led Through the maze of the dreams of the old trundle-bed.

Oh, the old trundle-bed! oh, the old
trundle-bed!
With its plump little pillow and old-fashioned spread;
Its snowy white sheets and the blankets above,
Smoothed down and tucked round with the touches of love;
The voice of my mother to tell me to sleep

With the old fairy stories my memories keep Still fresh as the lilies that bloom o'er
the head
Once bowed o'er my own in the old trundle-bed.

POOR OLD DAD
You can scarce pick up a paper
And its "Post's Corner" greet,
Except you'll see a pretty poem
About the mother, saintly, sweet,
But you'll have a time of searching
Your eyes will be aching bad,
For you'll overtake a poem
At this time for poor old dad

Mr. H. isn't well in them,
Then that write of mother dear,
That there is never notice taken
Of her old man, sitting near.
No, his never meant to slight him,
But it looks a little sad
All the laqueets made for mother
And not a bloom for poor old dad.

Try, our mother watched there as
Till her dear old eyes would ache,
But old dad he bumped to feed us
And his back would nearly break.

Mother crowned above the cradle,
Gave devotion, all she had,
Still that was not any circus
At this time for poor old dad.

Do not take one line from mother
When you write the soul sweet song,
But if there is a word for father
Now and then it can't be wrong.
Poor old soul, he's grey and wrinkled,
And I know it would make him glad
If while you are praising mother,
Something is said for poor old dad.

THE SUMMIT OF FUJI.

When Morning Breaks Over the Vexed Top of Japan.

Suddenly a spark, a flame and then a burst of fire, and lo and behold, the rosy morning is awake once more on Fuji's peerless crest while Japan, below, is yet enveloped in the slumy mists of night.

The pilgrims fall on their knees and bow their heads to the ground in adoration, and with much lingering of rosaries the plaintive rancidity of their prayers rises like a lamentation to the heavens above.

At Benares, the sainted city of the Hindus, as the sun rises each morning across the holy Ganges the prayers of the bathing multitude are as the roaring of the sea. But even this, one of the greatest and most stirring religious spectacles of the world, is not more picturesque than that little band of pilgrims "twixt heaven and earth, high up in the blue profusion, on the very top of Japan, kneeling in prayer before the great orb which is the emblem of their empire.

Never to have seen sunrise from the summit of Fuji is never to have really seen Japan.

The kindly nature which made this lovely land has surpassed all its other efforts in the lavish profusion with which it has scattered its favors around the sacred mountain. Ripping rills and roaring rivers, dancing cascades and thundering waterfalls, feathery woods and deep forests there are on every side, but of all these glories the most enchanting are the lakes which lie embosomed like flashing jewels among the hills.

Of them all Shinji and Motosu are the most beautiful, the latter excelling in the exquisite softness of its waters and its dainty, delicate beauty all other lakes in Japan and challenging comparison with the fairest waters of the world.—Herbert G. Ponting in Metropolitan Magazine.

Centures.

"It will help actors in restoring correctly," said a playwright, "to remember that all generation is an inheritance from our simian ancestors. We show abhorrence best by the same movements with which we would repel a wet dog. We show affection by the movements with which we would receive a loved physical object. We move our heads from side to side to signify 'no' because that was the way our monkey ancestors avoided a proffered and undesirable morsel of food. We nod for 'yes' because that was the way our monkey forbears reached for an acceptable morsel."

A Hypocrite.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is a hypocrite? Pa—A hypocrite, my son, is a man who publicly thanks the Lord for his success and then gets mad and every time anybody blasphemes that he isn't mainly responsible for it himself.—Chicago News.

Then He Went.

Mr. Baptiste—Baptism is a fine thing. Now, I am always being carried away by enthusiasm. Miss Cushman—Yes, but the trouble is it doesn't carry you far enough.—Philadelphia Record.

Letting the Cat Out.

"What would you do if papa should die, Charlie?" asked the father before a room full of company.

"Send away the only source of life and get the piggy one after!"—London Times.

Safety Sandwiches.

Parson—Oh, Mrs. Haines, how did you avoid this meat in your sandwiches on Sunday? Mrs. Haines blushed. Oh, surely! We used my husband's safety razor.—Judge.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT

Rufus Cheate Timberton was a very eminent lawyer. He had so much business to attend to that he could do little himself but take up cases that had been prepared for him by his large staff of assistants. It was necessary that he should have every detail carefully placed before him. His position might be compared to that of a railroad train running on automatic switches. Anything wrong in a mechanical detail may wreck the train; anything wrong in Mr. Timberton's staff might wreck his case.

It was natural, then, that he should exact great care from his assistants. Any one of them failing to keep him, as it were, running on the right track was instantly discharged. But they had all been with him a long while and had become so used to their duties that there never was a nut or bolt of the office machinery misplaced.

Mr. Timberton was one morning in court attending to a divorce case. He did not take divorce cases as a rule, but in this one his client was very rich and his fee was to be enormous. Both the husband and wife were in court. Mr. Timberton always instructed his clients to blind obedience to his methods, and whatever he did or said in the courtroom was to be accepted without question as a part of his scheme. His assistant, Mr. Pinky, who had prepared the present case for him, was in court and sat beside his chief with a bundle of papers before him. Mr. Pinky was a lean man of twenty-seven who looked anywhere from thirty to fifty. Mr. Timberton was addressing the court.

"It is stated in the plea," he said, "that this woman has rendered the man's life a burden. We shall show how she neglected her home, turned her children over to nurses and spent her time among the fashionable multimillionaires who are the money power of this republican country and would gladly, if they could, turn it over to a monarch of their own choosing. At evening, when her hardworking husband came to his home, what did he find? A wife to meet him at the door with a smile of welcome and a consoling kiss? No. She was either driving in the park or losing his hard earned money in some palace where our commercial aristocracy gambles at the game of bridge."

That Mr. Pinky feared something had gone wrong with the office peering system was evident from the fact that he dived into the papers before him, pulled out one and hastily examined it.

"There is nothing," continued the speaker, "so beautiful as the home. The good book tells us that our Maker created man in his own image. And what is the family but a miniature of the immortal father and his mortal children? When a woman—"

Mr. Timberton was interrupted by a pull at his coat sleeve. He paid no attention to it. In a few moments he was interrupted by another pull. Glancing down angrily, he saw Mr. Pinky looking up at him with dismay holding a paper for his chief to see and pointing with his finger to a certain place. The learned lawyer saw at once that he had made a mistake. His assistant had not made it. He had made it himself. He had been retained by the wife when he was holding up as a violator of domestic comfort.

If there before faculty that goes to make up greatness it is resource. Mr. Timberton took time only to abuse his assistant in a whisper for not before calling his attention to his error; then he turned to the court and faced the court.

"In these days of legal chicanery," he went on, "it behooves one instructed with a client's interests to forestall these tricky methods that are resorted to by unscrupulous attorneys. I have preferred to state the case against my client myself. What I have told you about this much abused, long suffering woman will be told by her husband's attorney. But how will it be told? By placing even a worse construction than I have placed on it. He will put upon her the popular obliquity of riches. We award these millions but the man who is suing one whom I shall show by competent witnesses to be a virtuous domestic wife and mother? You will be told of the iniquity of bridge what, but you will not be told that my client does not know the game. You will have the sacredness of the family held up before you, but instead of being told that the breach has been made in this case by this prodigal man whose plea cry out against him they will be told at the door of his faithful wife."

At this juncture the husband cast a glance at his wife, and at the same moment the wife cast a glance at the husband. Her lips broke into a smile which was reflected on his. They were a wealthy young couple who had found the bridge between romance and married life quite as difficult to pass as most couples, if not more so. Mr. Timberton saw both smiles, and his rare genius found still another field.

"My experience," he continued, "in this case, your honor, before it came to trial convinced me that it was one to be settled out of court. In conducting it I have adopted the methods of an awkward argument, which is English means reducing to an absurdity. I have shown both the plaintiff and the defendant how shallow are the reasons that may be brought forth on either side. I have given them of a distinguished opponent as well as my own. I now move an adjournment of the case, during which the parties may confer with a view to a settlement."

The case was settled out of court.

What It Means

Many People do not know what a Bank's Capital and Surplus are for, or the difference between a Bank of little or no Capital and Surplus and one with large Capital and Surplus.

A Bank's Capital and Surplus

Are the fund that protects the depositors from loss; therefore the larger they are, the greater protection the depositor has. This bank has a

Capital of	$100,000.00
Surplus fund of	150,000.00
Undivided Profits	40,000.00
Additional Stockholder's Liability	100,000.00

A Total of $390,000.00

This means that we must lose $390,000.00 before our depositors could lose a cent. This protection is for YOU. When you think "Bank" think Sunshine and Hair.

"I returned from Africa with crisp, curly hair," said an engineer. "I went bareheaded there all winter in the brilliant sunshine, and as I watched my hair, greasy locks dry and sink up I began to understand why the hatless natives working around me had such peculiar dry, tightly curled hair. The sun was the cause, of course."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Colorado Mountain Lions.

"It is conceded and it is true that the largest mountain lions in the world are produced in Colorado. There is something in our climate here that makes the mountain lion very much larger than the ones raised in Montana or Wyoming to the north or New Mexico to the south. In other words, the Colorado mountain lion seems to be of the maximum size and strength and beauty."—Denver Post.

His Nasty Look.

Two London cabbies were glaring at each other.

"Aw, we're the matter with you?" demanded one.

"Not that's the matter with me, you bloomin' idiot!"

"You gave me a nasty look," protested the first.

"Not why, you certainly 'ave a nasty look, but I didn't give it to you, so 'elp me!"—Kerrybody's.

He Fooled Himself.

A station master who had been taking a short holiday at some distance from his own station went to catch the last train home and on entering the station found a lady trying to turn the handle of one of the compartments. The station master rushed to her assistance, opened the door, banded the passenger in, slammed the door to and then, by force of habit, waved his hand to the guard and stood calmly on the platform till the train had steamed out of sight. He had to walk home, and the other station master laughed.—London Standard.

Would He Be a Herby.

"Martin," said the solicitor's employer, "how many times have I told you that there are no such things as herbs?"

"You've told me that a heap o' times."

"And yet you go on being frightened."

"Well, sah, I believe you when you say dat ain't none. But my mind keeps telling me dat one o' dem herbs dat I've seen in de garden is a herb dat I can't tell de difference without stoppin' in de shop. Ah, boss, I ain't got no presence o' mind whin'er!"—Washington Star.
